STAGE 1: Wireframe

We created a low - fidelity wireframe;

This was essentially a quick drawing to help understand how the page was going to look like . We did this on paper and then used Figma to track wireframe connection

The image shows a Figma interface with four wireframe prototypes:

- Home page (low fidelity): A wireframe of a landing page with a large 'X' icon at the top, several horizontal lines for content, and two circular icons at the bottom.
- Contact Us page (low fidelity): A wireframe of a contact form page with a large 'X' icon at the top, several horizontal lines for input fields, and two circular icons at the bottom.
- Homepage (High fidelity): A detailed wireframe of a gym homepage featuring a navigation bar with 'Home', 'Contact', and 'Careers', a banner image of people working out, and text about the gym being open 24/7.

STAGE 2: Colour palette

We considered the colour palette

We thought about what the possible brand behind the gym's website would have in terms of their colour palette; we chose gold, black , blue and hints or orange to be involved in the brand guideline

Our website includes:

The Gym website includes..

404: Page Not Found

Let's go back to the Homepage

Learning points:

- Understanding and integrating accessibility features, such as alt tags on images
- Using Web Development tools such as Bootstrap and exploring Github
- All in all it was a learning curve that allowed to put into practice the concepts learnt and we are proud of this being the beginning.
